AMONG THE MANY HISTORICAL LANDMARKS AND CULTURAL AMERICANA THAT MAKE THE BALTIMORE-WASHINGTON METROPOLITAN AREA SO RICH, DON'T MISS OUT ON THE TUCKED-AWAY INDEPENDENT SHOPS THAT HELP KEEP THIS REGION SO DIVERSE.

OLD WORLD

GoodWood has been an antiques haven and U Street staple since 1994. With an ever-changing stock of furniture, mirrors, lighting, glassware and curiosities, it's the ultimate antidote to mainstream shopping. Appealing to both younger generations in modern apartments and homeowners in the midst of renovating, you'll often hear devoted shoppers profess, "I wish I lived here!" Bring home a coveted antique—large or small—and it's sure to be your next conversation starter. goodwooddc.com

CURATED CLOTHING

Cathy Chung and Katerina Herodotou, founders of Washington, D.C.'s vintage clothing boutique Treasury, are intent on selling clothing for men, women and children with a definitive point of view. The clothing and accessories are well-made, unique and both environmentally and economically responsible, with such eclectic finds as feather fascinators, 1950s ties and antique jewelry. Like most buried treasures it's all about the hunt and, trust us, this one will be worth it. shoptreasury.com

TAILOR-MADE

With the launch of her eponymous clothing collection and the opening of her D.C. boutique, Julia Farr's longtime dream of working in fashion has become a reality. Farr's polished American-made line epitomizes simple yet sophisticated style, and customers can visit her pristine showroom for consultations on how to build a chic and personal wardrobe. From accessories to clothing, an appointment with Farr will have you stylishly covered. juliafarrdc.com

SETTING THE TONE

Subdued hues and quiet shades permeate the enchanting inventory inside Bethesda antiques shop Tone on Tone. Specifically specializing in Swedish furnishings—known for its clean lines—owners Loi Thai and Thomas Troeschel are particular about selecting pieces that impart the classic neutral palette synonymous with that style. Rich patinas are appointed to streamlined furnishings, causing us to swoon for simpler interiors. tone-on-tone.com winter bliss.

MELT THIS SEASON'S BLUES AWAY WITH A JAUNT AROUND WASHINGTON, D.C., WHERE YOU'LL FIND A THRIVING LOCAL ART SCENE, A HOTEL FIT FOR THE PRESIDENT, AMERICAN CUISINE WITH A TWIST, AND DELICIOUS PASTRIES THAT MIGHT JUST BE TOO PRETTY TO EAT.

ALL-ACCESS

Situated in beautiful Georgetown alongside the historic C&O Canal, Capella Hotel boasts more than the perfect location. With luxury guest rooms, flexible check-in and -out times, an indoor-outdoor infinity pool and Personal Assistant services, this hotel promises a memorable and custom-made stay. Personal Assistants can coordinate private after-hours shopping excursions at exclusive stores and backstage access to the Washington Ballet. capellahotels.com

AMERICAN FARE

Opened by Sherman Outhuok and Executive Chef Ron Tanaka, D.C. neighborhood restaurant Thally features a modern American menu, craft beers, housemade sodas and fabulous cocktails known as "Thallytails." With artwork of antique stables and carriage houses from the neighborhood's past hung on exposed brick walls, Thally's jewel-toned interior reflects the history of the surrounding area. Post up with the locals at the bar and savor the Sibillini Honey, a signature "Thallytail". thallydc.com

ARTISTIC COMMUNITY

Part fine art gallery, part event space, Washington, D.C.'s Long View Gallery is passionate about nurturing local artists, both emerging and established. The gallery houses rotating exhibitions from its roster of regional artists as well as an ever-growing permanent collection. The raw space and industrial vibe allows the art to take center stage, like this piece from Michelle Peterson-Albandoz, and the events they hold to always look and feel unique. longviewgallerydc.com

BUZZ WORTHY

Husband-and-wife duo and bake shop proprietors Debby and Han Kim met in New York while attending the Culinary Institute of America, and with their passion for French pastries opened Washington D.C.'s first macaron shop, Macaron Bee, in Georgetown's historic Book Hill district. These beautifully crafted sweets are offered in both classic and seasonal flavors and, in a fun tribute to the city's culture, look out for the Cherry Blossom macarons! macaronbee.com

SARA BALDWIN, FOUNDER AND CREATIVE DIRECTOR BEHIND CHIC TILE BRAND NEW RAVENNA MOSAICS, DISHES ON CLASSIC PATTERNS TO SWOON FOR, CASHMERE THROWS TO SNUGGLE UP TO AND TASTING MENUS THAT LEAVE LITTLE LEFT TO WANT.

PREPSTER CHIC

When it comes to fashion I'm a plaid pants and elbow patches kind of girl. This winter I'm seeing a lot of houndstooth, as well—and loving the preppy notes found in J.Crew's 2014 RTW collection—not only on the runways and in the stores, but also in my studio. As part of my continuing fascination with textiles interpreted into mosaics, New Ravenna's newest collection is a wild houndstooth design. jcrew.com

SOFT SPOKEN

My friend Kevin O'Brien sells the most wonderful cashmere throws, and I was finally able to experience one for myself this winter when he sent one to us to use as a prop in a photo shoot. I like to bask in the blaze of a fire with some Jack Daniel's Tennessee whiskey, my white German shepherd Gabby, my family, and now, Kevin's blanket. I also love his gorgeous pillow selections found at Oliver Dunn. kevinobrienstudio.com

GROUND FLOOR

Most of my time is spent in the studio designing custom mosaics for people all over the world. But one of my favorite activities is to stop by our local D.C. area showrooms, such as Marble Systems, and meet with the staff and customers. There's nothing better than direct feedback—let's face it, you can't design in a vacuum—and symbiotic relationships are the cornerstone of our best work. I'm a rock geek and a marble connoisseur, so I never tire of viewing stone in any format. Check out my signature collection, Talya, available in local showrooms now. newravenna.com; marblesystems.com

MUSSEL BOUND

Brabo's Tasting Room is such an experience! Part of Alexandria's burgeoning foodie scene, Brabo is the brainchild of acclaimed chef Robert Wiedmaier. I love to sit in this busy restaurant at the furthest booth by the window, looking out to the street on a cold wintery day while sipping a nice cup of tea. The mussels are the restaurant's signature dish, consisting of three different and delicious recipes and served directly from the stove in a hot pan. Amazing! braborestaurant.com
